RABBI IRWIN WIENER, D.D.

God Knows

Susan B. Anthony (1820-1906), American Women's Rights Advocate, wrote, "I distrust those people who know so well what God wants them to do, because I notice it always coincides with their own desires." I think of this every time I read or hear about someone pontificating on what God wants from us and for us. It amuses me that there are those who proclaim to be in direct contact with God, and it is because of this so-called connection, they attempt to control our every thought and action.

To ascribe this to arrogance would be to underestimate the detriment to which they affect our lives. Perhaps we could describe these people as sanctimonious. The clear indication is that there are people who think they are better than others and use God as the justification for their feelings.

Perhaps we should attempt to understand the purpose for which faith was installed in our psyche. Faith, to me, is synonymous with hope. Each gives us the opportunity to make sense of our lives, no matter what direction is followed. That is exactly what Scripture is intended to inculcate in us. The words found in these various writings are there to help us understand human nature and the various relationships we discover as time progresses.

Whether one believes that these words are inspired or the result of revelations does not alter the fact that human behavior is dictated by moral responsibility and the attitude of right and wrong. These are the fundamentals of a civilized society as prescribed by God. Still, we are just human. I believe this humanity gives us an added responsibility. To attain a level of attempting to emulate God is not an easy task. We are so fragile and susceptible to so many distortions.

The Prophets attempted to reinforce this concept of goodness by illustrating what can become of us if we destroy the very fabric of our existence. They illustrate in prose the things we can do to ourselves that can surely be inherited by those who follow. When Scripture talks about the sins of the fathers carrying forward to our progeny, it is describing what can result if we do not realize the harm of not recognizing the path of destruction. It is not a curse, but rather a warning.

Closed minds lead to closed thoughts, and, in turn, to dogmatic approaches to our existence. Living life with no peripheral vision is tantamount to walking around with a blindfold, cutting off not only vision, but light as well. Think of it as walking into a dark room, feeling our way, groping for support, and only realizing redemption when a light appears.

Being judgmental or critical is a form of abuse and is contrary to what faith is intended to accomplish. Acceptance and encouragement are what is needed if we are to find fulfillment. Jealousy leads to contempt. Satisfaction with our lot eliminates frustration. Gratitude gives us the ability to accept what is, with an eye toward what could be, if we try.

Perhaps Susan B. Anthony was attempting to teach us these very things. Perhaps Scripture can instill in us the understanding that we are responsible for our actions because they affect not only ourselves, but those around us as well. Perhaps we can and should feel better, not because we followed some prescribed order or spoke words that are lost as they are uttered, but rather because we have a clearer picture of our purpose – not because someone told us to, but because we know full well the impact of these words, and because we can come together in the one place designed to help us understand a little better: our houses of worship. And we can understand that our lives were placed in our hands, not someone else's.

This the eternal gift given to us by God. 🙏

CELEBRATE SUKKOT WITH SLJC

Sunday, October 1, 11 AM-1 PM, Hosted by Wendy Feldman-Kerr and Eric Kerr

Join your SLJC community for a potluck Sukkot lunch at the home of Wendy Feldman-Kerr and Eric Kerr. The traditional etrog and lulav will grace the natural, leafy area that will house the sukkah.

Please bring a dish suitable for 8-10 people. Wendy suggests wearing casual shoes as the event will be held outdoors unless it is too hot (in which case, the celebration will be held indoors). Directions to Wendy's home will be sent by email. Please contact Wendy at (480) 987-9425 for further information and/or to let her know what you will bring. We hope to see you there!

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

If you have skills in graphic arts and would like to volunteer to provide art for the Shpiel covers, please call Geri at (480)305-0123.

SLJC extends its condolences to the family of Alan Rubinstein, who died on September 20. May his memory be for a blessing.

SOMETHING YOU MIGHT NOT KNOW

ANNA ROSENBERG By Murray Siegel

Who was Anna Rosenberg? Most Americans, even Jewish Americans, might not know that Anna was the second most powerful American woman during the mid-20th century. Only Eleanor Roosevelt had more influence on the country.

Anna was born in Budapest, in the Austrian Empire at the turn of the century. She moved with her family to New York City prior to World War I. As a young woman, she became involved with local Democratic politics and discovered that she had a facility for labor negotiations.

She became an adviser to Franklin Roosevelt and often found herself as the only woman in the room. She was tasked with ensuring that manufacturing positions were filled at defense plants. She solved this by seeing that positions were filled by women and minorities. In 1944, FDR sent her to Europe to interview American soldiers to find out what they wished for once the war was over.

Her conversations with wounded soldiers in hospitals and soldiers at the front caused her to see that the GI Bill was created. Harry Truman respected her work and he had her nominated to be Assistant Secretary of Defense. After a contentious Senate consideration of her appointment, she was confirmed. Anna was sent to Korea to find out what was on the minds of Americans in combat.

During her time in Europe, she became close to General Eisenhower, and when he became President, he called upon her for advice. She was responsible for organizing Jack Kennedy's birthday party in 1962 — the one where Marilyn Monroe sang "Happy Birthday." She had known Lyndon Johnson since he came to Congress, so she contributed to his administration.

So, given her importance, why is she so unknown? Most women who had important government positions back then either came from wealthy families and/or were graduates of elite colleges. This was not Anna; her education was derived from the streets of NYC. To learn more about this amazing woman, read The Confidante, by Christopher Gorham, published earlier this year.
